* Adobe Photoshop Elements 2/3. This inexpensive, compact version includes all the same features as Photoshop and can work with both Windows and Mac files. It requires no installation; you must purchase the program before it can be installed. Photoshop Elements is new enough that those who already have it on their hard drive can experiment with it first. Figure 6-1. You can learn about these tools in the manual, so the pages that follow, are good places to start. Figure 6-1 offers an abbreviated version of Photoshop's interface. The tabs and windows are a little different in the Elements version. Either one will work fine. The buttons are all the same in both programs. Photoshop uses the same paintbrush tools and eraser tool as before. Figure 6-2.The button with the paintbrush tool on the left in the figure is located just to the left of the option buttons labeled _Background, Foreground_, and _Color_. To me, that seems contrary. As cliché as it sounds, I can't write and write at the same time. So when I run out of things to write, I get discouraged and abandon the whole project. I'm pretty good at kicking the whole thing, but I hate the

Q: Pdo not closed when the function ends I'm trying to populate a table with a cursor inside a function in a stored proc: CREATE PROCEDURE fill_table (@id INT, @element INT, @features VARCHAR(255)) AS BEGIN DECLARE @sql VARCHAR(MAX); INSERT INTO dbo.table_name (id, [element], [features]) VALUES (@id, @element, @features); OPEN cursor; FETCH NEXT FROM cursor INTO @features, @element; END GO When I end the function my cursor does not close: OPEN cursor; FETCH NEXT FROM cursor INTO @features, @element; END GO It happens only if I want to close the cursor, if I don't close it I get a message of that cursor is not closed. Do you know why? A: You have to add a new line after the GO to have the compiler know you're done executing. For example GO CLOSE cursor; Significant Enhancement of Light-Induced Reactions in Proteins Using Charge Irradiated Titanium Dioxide Nanoparticles. Light-induced reactions using titanium dioxide (TiO_2) nanocrystals irradiated in an aqueous solution of protein are reported for the first time. Charge-induced nanoparticle interactions in a suspension of proteins that resulted in protein aggregation and degradation of the TiO_2 nanoparticles under light exposure at 10 mL/cm2 are reported. To analyze the role of photocatalytic radicals on the protein hydrolysis, two different approaches were employed. The first approach was to utilize disulfide bonds as trapping groups and the second was to incorporate tyrosine residues in the protein backbone. In both cases, the protein aggregation observed after the charge irradiation of TiO_2 nanoparticles resulted in photo-induced hydrolysis of proteins and the removal of the trapping groups. The photochemical reactions using TiO_2 nanoparticles, however, resulted in significantly enhanced light-induced hydrolysis in proteins. TiO_2 nanoparticle-mediated photochemistry under a continuous-
